Series 3

When two or three officers are absent at the same time, I find it very difficult to arrange for their work: for instance, there are now three officers on casual leave, Messrs L. Bishtopanth Badami, M.A. Sreenivasan and M.A. Singrachar who has been entrusted with the charge of the Deputy Secretary, Insurance, who has applied for privilege leave. There are no reserve officers attached to my office and as most of the items of work cannot be kept waiting, it is necessary to arrange for attending to them; but when several officers are absent at the same time, I find it impossible to arrange for their work. Some remedy for this inconvenience which frequently arises, is necessary and I can only suggest that I may be authorised to entrust work, in such circumstances, to a senior superintendent of my office.

The difficulty represented by the Comptroller is real and the remedy suggested by him may be allowed. The staff of his superintendents now consists of several experienced and qualified men and it would be well if he is authorised, in ~~such~~ circumstances stated by him to entrust gazetted officers' work to such superintendents as are, in his opinion, competent to do the gazetted officers' work during short periods of absences of the latter. The arrangement proposed will generally be during absence on casual leave, except when officers take short periods of privilege leave within the powers of the Comptroller, after having exhausted their casual leave. If the respective sectional superintendents are themselves competent, it will involve the least dislocation and in fact, no additional work, as such superintendents will, in any case, have to pass the papers and mark them for gazetted officers. The proposal will not also entail any cost, as the arrangement contemplated will generally be in casual leave vacancies. In passing bills for payment, it will be necessary to send to Treasuries the facsimile signatures of the officers authorised to sign preaudited endorsements and the Comptroller may send such signatures to them. If the permission asked for by the Comptroller is allowed, it will be necessary to notify the arrangement
